CULTURE OF GLADIOLI

PLANTING

Gladioli may be planted at any time during the spring when the ground is in good condition. The gladioli will do well in almost any good garden soil. Do not plant in the shade of trees or buildings. If a prolonged blooming season is desired plantings should be made at intervals of two weeks. This may be continued until about June 15th.

Plant large bulbs in rows 6 inches deep, 4 to 6 inches between each bulb in the row and at least eighteen inches between the rows. Small bulbs should be planted from 3 to 4 inches deep.

FERTILIZATION

Any well rotted barn manure, bone meal, or commercial fertilizer will give good results.

CULTIVATION

Cultivate often and thoroughly. Do not allow the ground to bake around plants. Gladioli are heavy feeders, and a medium quantity of rotted manure or good fertilizer may be worked into the soil to a good advantage. These methods with good cultivation between the rows at least every ten days will give good results.

CUTTING BLOOMS

In cutting the blooms, the spike should be cut high enough, as to leave at least four leaves on the plant, so as to mature the bulb.

The flower spike may be cut when the first bloom has opened.

DIGGING

After the foliage has begun to die down or been cut by the frost the bulbs should be lifted and the tops cut off close to the bulb. They should be placed in shallow crates or boxes and set in the sun for about a week to dry, after which they may be placed inside where they can get plenty of air until time to place in storage.

STORING

When the bulbs are thoroughly dry, they should be stored in a cool, dry cellar. Keep as near 40 degrees as possible.

Every lover of flowers should subscribe to the Flower Grower published by Madison Cooper Calcium, N. Y. $1.50 per year.
